In a column published by Forbes, Rhett Buttle explores how America's small business owners can encourage their employees to take the COVID-19 vaccine. According to Rhett, over 92 million people generate their livelihoods from small businesses as either an owner or an employee, representing more than on quarter of the U.S. population. With this type of reach and influence, he says, small business owners can be leaders in raising awareness and support for the COVID-19 vaccine. The article links to Fisher Phillips' Vaccine Resource Center as a key provider of vaccine policy templates for business owners.
