Howard Mavity was quoted in Corporate Counsel on November 30, 2015. The article "Another Year of More Whistleblower Cases for OSHA" discussed how the number of whistleblower complaints filed to OSHA, which handles claims beyond everyday workplace safety, grew significantly in the fiscal year 2015.

Howard said that he has seen up close OSHA's major investment of funds and as well as time and energy in protecting whistleblowers. Given, the large amount of changes that have been made, he doesn't really see a proportional increase in complaints. "The increase, while significant, is not as much as one would expect given the sheer amount of resources OSHA has put into it," he said.
