Fisher Phillips was profiled by the online publication Employment Law360 for their September 28 posting. The article covered the firm's roots prior to World War II and how the firm has worked hard for 60 years to represent employers in workplace matters. Firm Chairman Roger Quillen said, "We are the brain surgeons of this profession. We do it every day--that's all we do." Roger told Employment Law360 that boutique firms have an edge over employment practices inside large general practice firms. "We are one of the great specialty firms. I don't care how big a general practice firm's employment practice is--you can't find one that can rival us in terms of breadth and depth of experience." Roger also pointed out, "Our catch phrase is 'solutions at work.' Our lawyers are trained in trying to help employers solve and avoid legal problems." Click below to read the article.
