For many employees, completing the I-9 for process is an exciting time because it means they have landed that job and have arrived for their first day of work. For employers, however, the I-9 form can be a process that is confusing, especially when it comes to determining whether certain identity and employment eligibility documents presented by employees are acceptable.

In the article, "Employment Verification Never Looked So Good," featured in Columbus Business Monthly, Attorney Sheila Bias discusses the updated I-9 form and the efficiency that it offers employers.
