The Trump administration has certainly made a lot of legislation changes, which in turn has given the legal profession a big boost. In the article, "Lawyers Are Back: Politics and New Practice Areas," Attorney Rich Meneghello describes this increase in business as a "double-edged sword."

"The uptick in business is a double-edged sword, at least in Oregon's more liberal enclaves. The 45th president is creating cognitive dissonance for business and employment law attorneys who voted for the opposition but whose clients now benefit from new executive branch policies," Rich tells Oregon Business.
