Louisville Lawyer Talks to Business Journal about Legal Considerations for Reopening Restaurants

News
5.29.20

As restaurants across Kentucky begin to ramp back up, it is vital that these establishments think through the legal issues that may arise when reopening their doors. In an interview with Louisville Business First, Emily Litzinger predicted that the top three COVID-related workplace issues for restaurants will involve workplace safety, wage and hour issues and employee leave.

Emily provides examples of employment law scenarios that she and her clients have witnessed first-hand. Ultimately, she recommends that employers should "[b]e a little more flexible, understanding there's a completely new landscape of running a business and there are various potential issues with your employees that could be out there."

To read the article, visit Louisville Business First (subscription required).

Please reach out to our Media team for any news inquiries.

Related People

Emily N. Litzinger
Partner
502.561.3978
Email

Copyright © 2024 Fisher Phillips LLP. All Rights Reserved.

Industry Focus

Hospitality

Related Offices

Louisville

Copyright © 2024 Fisher Phillips LLP. All Rights Reserved.