The new international workplace safety standard ISO 45001 will help businesses reduce the burden of occupation-related accidents and create safer workplace conditions. However, many employers have questions about how to implement the standard and how it will help their business. In an interview with EHS Today, Travis Vance, co-chair of the firm's Workplace Safety and Catastrophe Management practice, provides clarity on why companies should adopt the new standard. Travis discusses how the standard will be beneficial for international trade, costs related to certification and how it interacts with other international or U.S. workplace safety standards.
