Co-Chair of Firm's Healthcare Practice Discusses the Manager's Role in Vaccinating Employees

News
2.23.21

In an interview with SHRM, Kevin Troutman explains that managers are likely the first people workers will go to with concerns or questions about the vaccine. As a result, managers play an important role in encouraging their workforce to get vaccinated by helping employees understand why it is critical for the business. Kevin recommends that employers also enlist the help of other influential people to encourage employee vaccination, and he specifically points to trusted figures in the community including medical professionals and faith leaders.
