Career-intelligence.com has published an article entitled “How to make a good impression at the office party.”

The November 2013 issue included commentary from Tampa Partner Theresa Gallion.

In the article, Theresa explains that the office holiday party is the last place to get drunk, act rowdy, or bring attention to yourself with unprofessional behavior.

“Do those things, if you must, on your own time, not in the presence of the people who evaluate you, determine your compensation and your continuing employment status,” said Theresa.
