SAN FRANCISCO, CA (June 13, 2014) – Fisher Phillips, a national labor and employment law firm representing employers, adds Jason Geller as a partner in its San Francisco office. Representing employers in litigation in both federal and state courts, Geller was most recently a partner at Meckler Bulger Tilson Marick & Pearson LLP.

“Jason’s experience in employment litigation further strengthens the legal services we offer our clients in Northern California. We are excited to welcome him in San Francisco and to add him to our robust national roster of attorneys with deep knowledge and broad experience in employment law,” said Timothy J. Murphy, managing partner of Fisher Phillips’ San Francisco office.

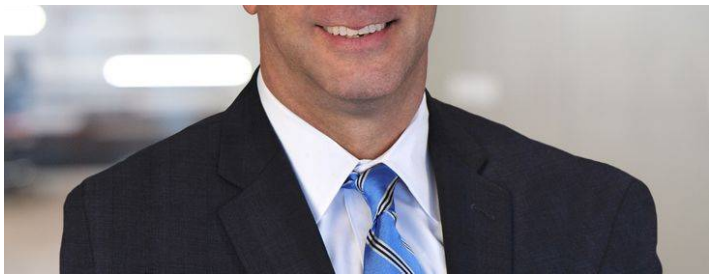

Geller has substantial experience in litigation and employment dispute counseling. He also represents clients in investigations by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, California Department of Fair Employment and Housing and National Labor Relations Board. Representing employers in a variety of industries, including construction, manufacturing, technology, retail, restaurant, and staffing, Geller is experienced in the preparation of employee handbooks and a variety of agreements.

Geller is a member of the Northern California Human Resources Association and Employers’ Advisory Council of the California Employment Development Department. He received his J.D. from the Gonzaga University School of Law (1993) and his B.A. from the University of California, Santa Barbara (1989).
