Lori Halber was quoted in Business Insurance on January 31, 2016. The article “Ruling Maps Out Class Action Defense Plan” discussed how the U.S. Supreme Court’s ruling on an unsolicited text message technically sided with plaintiffs, but also suggested a way companies can cut back on the amount of class action litigation filed.

Lori was quoted on her take on the ruling.

“There has to be an agreement on some level that the offer actually covers the potential damages,” she said, “I’m not entirely convinced” that submitting the money “changes the complexion, if you will, of the offer.”
