News

12.02.16

In the article, "Employer Alert: OSHA free to enforce anti-retaliation rule," featured on Safety.BLR.com, attorney Howard Mavity discusses a judge's decision on OSHA's anti-retaliation provisions. The rules are now on the books and enforceable.

According to attorney Howard Mavity, the recent decision does not determine if the rule will be upheld long term, or whether the Trump administration will follow the interpretations.

Mavity advises employers to train supervisors to discipline employees for unsafe behavior before an injury occurs, rather than waiting until after an incident is reported.
