With March Madness right around the corner, employers may view this tournament as a potential distraction for their employees. In the article, "Will You Be Glued To March Madness At Work? Maybe That's A Good Thing," featured on New Jersey 101.5, Attorney Phillip Bauknight explains that March Madness may actually have a team-building effect in the office.

"It's a good way for people who may not interact with each other all the time to get to know each other, to talk about topics that they may not normally talk about," he said. "Everybody can be on the same page and be excited about the same thing and have a good time."
