In the article, "H-1B Visas for Computer Programmers May Be Harder to Come By," featured in SHRM, Partner Shanon Stevenson addresses the uncertainty employers may be feeling over the recent H-1B visa memo.

"It's not really a change, it's more a clarification for the workers in the Nebraska Service Center to fall in line with the other service centers," said Shanon. "Computer programmers can still qualify for an H-1B, but petitioning employers must show that the position fits the criteria for a specialty occupation."
