Partner Cheryl Behymer was quoted in the Law360 article, "EEOC Chair Says Pay Bias Still A Priority Despite OMB Move." This article discusses the White House's decision to offer temporary respite from the EEOC's pay-data collection efforts.

Behymer said the delay indicates that pay data reporting "was very burdensome and not very effective in the overall objective [of] eliminating pay disparity in gender," adding that employers will still face pressure from shareholders and others to make sure their compensation is fair.
