The Fisher Phillips Workplace Safety and Health Law blog has been named as one of the best on the internet, according to Feedspot's "Top 75 Health and Safety Blogs" ranking. Of the thousands of health and safety blogs reviewed, Fisher Phillips was ranked 18th by Feedspot's group of expert panelists.

"Effective workplace safety and health management programs are crucial for a company's success," said Roger Quillen, Fisher Phillips' chairman and managing partner. "We are proud of the Fisher Phillips team for helping educate the public on these topics through our firm's blog and are honored to be recognized as one of the most comprehensive resources available to employers."

The "Top 75 Health and Safety Blogs" are ranked based on Google reputation and search rankings, influence and popularity on social media platforms, quality and consistency of posts, and Feedspot's editorial team and expert review. The "Top 75 Health and Safety Blogs" are recognized for their valuable contributions to workplace health and safety.

"Like my partner Ed Foulke, I am passionate about workplace safety," said Howard Mavity, a partner and co-chair of the firm's Workplace Safety and Catastrophe Management Practice Group. "Since we started the blog, we have expanded the scope beyond typical legal discussions to instead focus on practical subjects, information from non-lawyer professionals and interrelated employment law issues, and I think that makes us unique."

"As an editor of the blog, I am pleased it has earned this recognition," said Edwin Foulke, a partner and co-chair of the firm's Workplace Safety and Catastrophe Management Practice Group. "The blog was one of the first things we discussed when I came to Fisher Phillips, and we have tried to use it to make an impact – we want to see employees go home safe at night."
