In this Bloomberg Law article, “Gigs Gone Wild: Could Blockchain Make Freelancing the Norm?” Adam Bridgers talks about how the revolution of blockchain technology may very well replace third party freelancing companies we’ve grown both to love and trust.

“We use Uber because we trust that it is properly vetting their drivers, requiring background checks, making sure the transactions are made in a safe way, and we get in a car with them. Because the blockchain replaces that centralized clearing house of data that we’ve come to rely on in the gig economy, you don’t necessarily need that anymore,”
