Art Lambert, of the Dallas office, was quoted in the D CEO Healthcare article “DFW Healthcare Professionals Take a Course on Active Shooters and Assault.” This article discusses the best practices related to an active shooter situation and workplace violence.

In events like these being proactive and prepared is crucial. Lambert advises that “Employers should emphasize to employees that they have a duty to report incidents, and train supervisors so that they’re ready to identify threats, find people who persistently cause problems, or show warning signs like constantly lying or exhibiting a fascination with weapons.

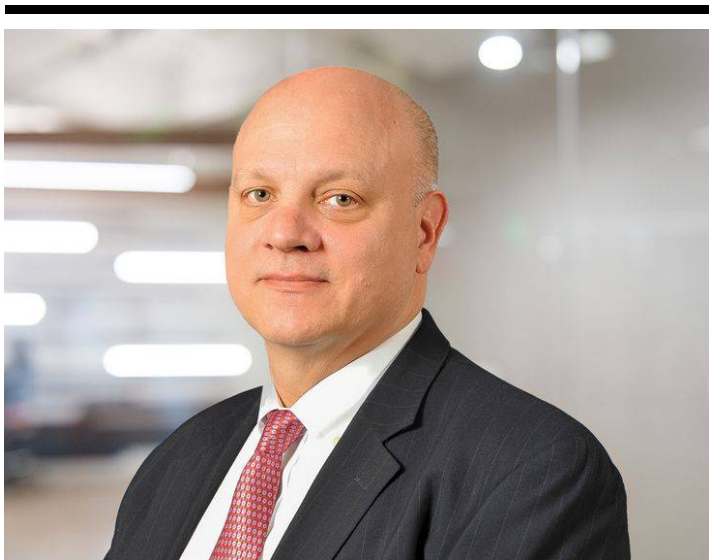

Employees should be well-trained on a workplace violence policy so that best practices become second nature, the way repeated fire drills prepare us for a fire, he said.
