ATLANTA (June 18, 2018) – Fisher Phillips announced today it has expanded its presence in Metropolitan Washington, D.C. and Philadelphia with the addition of one partner and one Of Counsel.

Joining Fisher Phillips are Partner Theresa M. Connolly in Washington, D.C. and Of Counsel Paul J. Greco in Philadelphia.

Theresa's practice is focused on advising and counseling employers in all employment matters and defending employers in all aspects of workplace litigation, including complex trade secret misappropriation cases. She also handles matters before the National Labor Relations Board and has been repeatedly recognized by various media and legal directories for her work.

Theresa joins Fisher Phillips from Constangy, Brooks, Smith & Prophete LLP. She said, "Fisher Phillips offers an expanded ability to handle complex litigation. I wanted to provide this platform to the clients I serve now and in the future."

Theresa will become the Managing Partner of the Metropolitan Washington, D.C. office. She will be involved in determining a new location for the Arlington office that currently is used by a variety of attorneys who have home offices elsewhere, but are licensed in D.C.

Theresa recently successfully litigated two misappropriation of trade secrets cases in federal court, one in Virginia and the other in Pennsylvania, and is currently involved in another complex, multiparty misappropriation suit in federal court in Michigan.

Paul, the third attorney joining the firm, formerly worked at Buchanan, Ingersoll & Rooney, PC, where he was Co-Chair of that firm's Trade Secrets and Restrictive Covenants practice group.

His practice focuses on protecting the trade secrets, intellectual property rights, and customer relationships that are part of employment arrangements. He handles restrictive covenant disputes, trade secret litigation, computer fraud and abuse matters, and unfair competition claims.

Paul represents clients in a wide array of industries and has achieved much success in the medical devices, healthcare and financial industries. A case he handled was chosen as one of "The Top 15 Spine & Orthopedic Device News Stories of 2013" by an important industry publication. In another

Paul said, "My clients often are faced with high stakes cases and I wanted a national platform with experienced attorneys to help with these matters that can have dramatic impacts on organizations."

Fisher Phillips Chairman and Managing Partner Roger Quillen said, "Attracting two powerhouse attorneys practicing in important areas of labor and employment law, all at once, is a testament to the experience, knowledge and dedication of the attorneys at Fisher Phillips who have built our nationally recognized practice. Our clients will benefit even more by the addition of two fantastic lawyers in two different parts of the country."
