It was well known in the intellectual property world that federal trade secrets litigation was on the rise. But this year, practitioners found out how much that increase was. In a published interview with Law Week Colorado, Denver Managing Partner Mike Greco said, “Companies are becoming more and more sophisticated in terms of protecting their trade secrets and becoming more proactive about it.” Later in the article, Mike noted that as Supreme Court decisions in recent years made patents for software inventions less reliable, trade secret protection gained priority as an alternative approach to protecting their technology.
