

New Jersey Partner Explains Garden State's Robust Laws Against Discrimination

News

2.05.19

Recent surveys show that working women with children believe they have to do more to climb the corporate ladder and many are fearful of telling their employers they are pregnant. However, in many states, including New Jersey, strict anti-discrimination laws prohibit employers from retaliating against protected classes. In an interview with NJ101.5, partner Kathleen Caminiti explains that New Jersey has some of the most robust laws against discrimination in the country, including gender discrimination, sexual harassment and pay equity. She said: “The state and the courts in New Jersey have really always been on the forefront of this issue. Most companies take discrimination issues very seriously and a growing number of Garden State businesses are open to providing job accommodations.”

To read the full article, visit NJ101.5.

---

Please reach out to our Media team for any news inquiries.

Related People

Kathleen McLeod Caminiti

Partner and Co-Chair, Wage and Hour Practice Group

908.516.1062

Email

Related Offices

New Jersey