

Denver Partner Speaks to Proposed Bill that Would Allow Municipalities to Set Their Own Minimum Wage Rates

News

3.04.19

Colorado's lawmakers are considering a bill that would allow the state's cities and counties to set their own minimum wage rates. If it passes, cities and counties would have to pass their own ordinances if they want their minimum wage rates to exceed the state's.

Interviewed for a Law Week Colorado article on the proposed measure, Denver partner Todd Fredrickson pointed out that it's questionable how many jurisdictions would take it upon themselves to enact a higher minimum wage. Further, he said, small employers would disproportionately feel the burden of managing multiple pay rates across jurisdictions.

To read the article, visit Law Week Colorado.

Please reach out to our Media team for any news inquiries.

Related People

Todd A. Fredrickson

Partner

303.218.3650

Email

Related Offices

Denver