MEMPHIS, Tenn. (August 13, 2019) – Fisher Phillips, a national labor and employment law firm representing employers, is pleased to announce the addition of Mark Trocinski as an associate in its Memphis office.

Mark's unique background includes work at an AmLaw 200 firm, as a legal professor in Bulgaria and as a foreign service officer with the U.S. State Department for four years. During his time at the State Department, Mark led the immigrant visa department for the nation of Argentina, handled highly sensitive information and managed projects to provide and support health care, rule of law and education programs.

In his private practice experience, Mark advised clients on drafting, revising and executing multiple forms of agreements, including franchise and change of control agreements. He also conducted due diligence on transactions in industries including renewable energy, medical practices, medical devices and agribusiness.

"Adding attorneys like Mark is an important step in our strategy to continue growing our Memphis office. As employers continue to grapple with the pace of change to the workplace and workforce, we will be adding attorneys across all practices who can bring efficient and effective solutions to solve our clients' most pressing workplace matters," said David Jones, managing partner of the Memphis office. "Mark's arrival greatly enhances our immigration capabilities and complements our growing team of labor and employment professionals Memphis."

Mark earned his law degree from the University of Iowa College of Law in 2005, his master's in business administration from the University of Iowa's Henry B. Tippie School of Management and his bachelor's degree in economics from Grinnell College. He is fluent in Spanish.

Mark is the second attorney to join Fisher Phillips in Memphis in less than a year. He follows the addition of Greg Grisham as Of Counsel at the end of 2018.
