Forbes partnered with market research company Statista to compile the inaugural list of top U.S. corporate law firms based on survey responses from 2,500 lawyers. Fisher Phillips not only made the list but was also noted as one of the most recommended firms for Labor & Employment. In an accompanying article, Forbes wrote about some key takeaways from this year’s list and noted that Fisher Phillips was among a select group of firms to have a Chief Diversity Officer. The article explained that “[d]iversity and gender parity have become big concerns of law firms...[m]any now have chief diversity officers, who are attempting to increase diversity among associates and partners with programs and initiatives reaching out to women and black, Latino, Asian-American, and LGBT individuals and groups.”
