

Attorney Fields Media Questions Regarding New Supreme Court Term

News

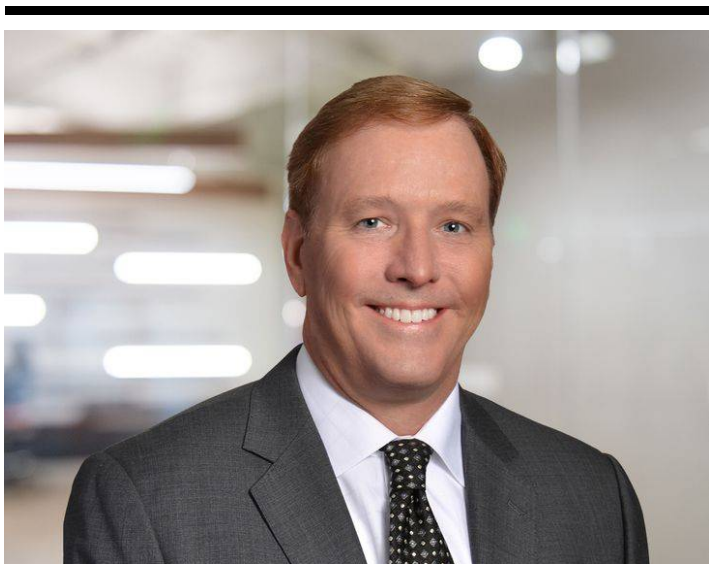

10.08.19

The 2019 Supreme Court session has officially been called to order, and Randall Coffey has been fielding questions from reporters—SHRM, Law360 and Business Insurance—about how the Court’s term will impact employers. To ignite the session, Justices heard oral arguments in a trio of cases to decide if Title VII covers sexual orientation and if employers can legally fire employees for being gay. Coffey, who has been tracking the cases at issue as they have winded their way up to the highest court in the land, told Business Insurance “I think it’s going to be fascinating to see how the court ends up reaching its result, and exactly what the scope of the debate is between whoever’s in the majority and whoever’s in the minority.”

To read the articles, visit SHRM (subscription required), Law360 (subscription required) and Business Insurance.

Please reach out to our Media team for any news inquiries.

Related People

J. Randall Coffey

Partner

816.842.8770

Email

