As everyone knows all too well, natural disasters can strike any time, any place. But as a business owner, what should you do to protect your employees and to comply with the law? In a live interview with WXXV-TV, Steve Cupp shared tips on storm preparedness that every company should use to protect itself and its employers from the impending storm and any legal trouble. Key to any plan is communication – supervisors should make employees aware of when they are able to leave, when they need to be back at the office and who to check in with while the office is closed. In addition, Steve outlines a few exceptions to the rules, including active servicemen who may need to assist with the disaster.
