Philadelphia, PA (January 27, 2020) – Fisher Phillips, a national workplace law firm representing employers, announces it will move its Philadelphia area office location to the iconic Two Logan Square building in Center City Philadelphia to accommodate the firm's growing practice. Fisher Phillips has signed a lease for nearly 21,000 SF on the 12th floor and expects to occupy the space in April.

"For more than a decade, Fisher Phillips has had a steadily growing presence in the Philadelphia area. This move will further energize our team and enhance our ability to become engaged with Philadelphia's business community and civic leadership," said Chris Stief, managing partner Fisher Phillips' Philadelphia office. "The move will provide us a space at the core of Philadelphia's business and legal markets and positions us to attract even more talent at all levels, including partners, associates and staff. Our goal was to find a space that uniquely positions us for our next decade of growth in Philadelphia. With 6,000 more square feet and modern amenities that will benefit both our attorneys and clients, this centralized location does just that."

Fisher Phillips established its presence in Philadelphia with the opening of its office in Radnor, PA in 2007. The firm's Philadelphia office has grown from six to 23 attorneys and is home to national leadership of Fisher Phillips' Employment Defense Litigation Practice Group, Employee Defection and Trade Secrets Practice Group, International Employment Practice Group, the Data Security and Workplace Privacy team, the firm's E-Discovery Committee, and the firm's Government Relations subsidiary, FP Advocacy.

The firm's office at Two Logan Square will be centrally located in Philadelphia's vibrant Center City business community. Attorneys, staff, clients and visitors will have quick connections to multimodal public transportation options, including SEPTA's Suburban Station via the updated underground concourse for regional rail, subway and subway-surface trolley lines, as well as nearby Indego (Philly Bike Share) stations; additionally, Two Logan Square is connected to a 650-space covered car park and has ready access to major highways. The building is ENERGY STAR-Certified.

In addition to the Philadelphia move, Fisher Phillips recently announced the opening of two new offices in Nashville and Detroit, and the intent to further expand its Los Angeles presence with an office in the San Fernando Valley. In 2019, the firm opened a Pittsburgh office, bringing on a team of three workplace safety partners.
