California employers are scrambling to adjust to the circumstances brought about by COVID-19, many of which will have a negative economic impact their employees and their businesses. A recent SHRM article explained that California has state resources available to help companies and workers who need relief during this tough time.

In this SHRM article, Irvine partner Warren Nelson describes that there have been some industries that have been hit harder than others, including the hospitality industry. He notes that “[t]he hospitality industry – which includes hotels and theme parks – is especially susceptible to mass layoffs as a result of the emergency.” The article advises employers in hospitality and other industries to consult an attorney for guidance throughout the fast-moving developments of the coronavirus pandemic.
