

The Washington Post Turns to Workplace Safety Co-Chair for Insights on CDC Reopening Guidelines

News

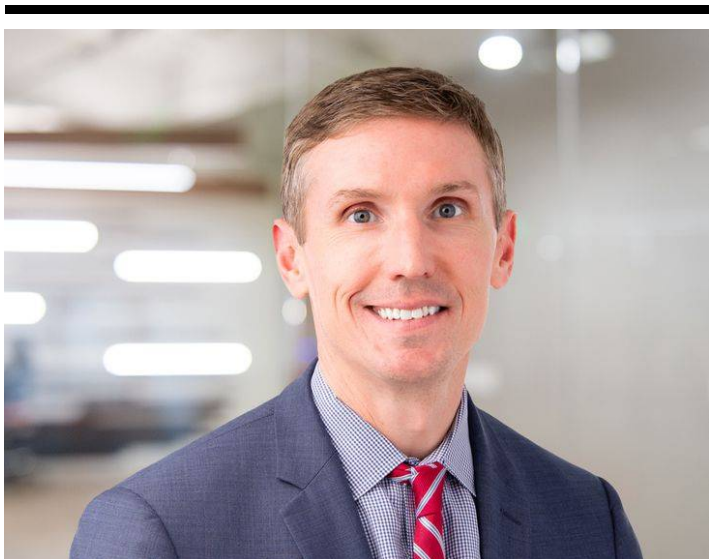

5.29.20

In an interview with The Washington Post, Workplace Safety Co-Chair Travis Vance comments on the guidance for employers from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) on safely reopening workplaces under the continued threat of COVID-19. The article describes the struggles that many companies face when trying to adhere to the latest CDC guidance, and it also describes how implementing safety measures will have a major impact on the physical and cultural aspects of all workplaces. Travis notes that this is going to be tough adjustment for the business world because “[a] lot of companies have never had hazards that they knew of, so they didn’t pay attention to OSHA regulations before, [but] now every workplace is a hazardous environment.”

To read the article, visit The Washington Post (subscription required).

Please reach out to our Media team for any news inquiries.

Related People

Travis W. Vance
Regional Managing Partner
704.778.4164
Email

Service Focus

Workplace Safety and Catastrophe Management