

What Construction Employers Need to Know to Navigate the Combination of COVID-19 and Flu Season

Publication

7.27.20

Many experts fear a surge of COVID-19 cases in the fall, and this projected increase will likely coincide with the beginning of flu season—creating a perfect storm for the public and employers alike. In his bylined article published in Construction Executive, Curtis Moore provides steps that construction employers should take to try to lessen the risk of their employees contracting the seasonal flu and COVID-19. Overall, the article provides guidance that not only assists construction-industry employers with complying with federal, state and local regulations and guidelines, but also aids construction employers in safely maintaining a workforce to complete projects during these challenging times.

To read the article, visit Construction Executive.

Related People

Curtis G. Moore

Partner

704.778.4179

Email

Service Focus

Workplace Safety and Catastrophe Management

Related Offices

Columbus