

Does the President's COVID-19 Case Need To Be Reported To OSHA? What Employers Can Learn from the Situation

Publication
10.09.20

President Donald Trump's diagnosis and hospitalization for COVID-19 captured the American public's attention. In a bylined article published by Law360, Travis Vance and Patrick Dennison discuss whether the President's COVID-19 diagnosis is considered "work-related," and if so, how would it be treated under the Occupational Safety and Health Administration's (OSHA) recordability and reporting laws. The article points out what the high-profile case of COVID-19 can teach employers about mandatory safety reporting obligations.

To read the article, visit Law360 (subscription required).

Related People

Patrick W. Dennison
Partner
412.822.6627
Email

Travis W. Vance
Regional Managing Partner
704.778.4164
Email

Service Focus

Workplace Safety and Catastrophe Management