

Partner Talks to SHRM About What the CDC's Latest Guidance Means for Employers

News

10.27.20

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) issued new guidelines about what it means to be in “close contact” with a COVID-19 infected person. In an interview with SHRM, Travis Vance describes how these new guidelines might impact employers’ COVID-19 related safety policies and practices. He explained that the “new guidance will make contact tracing using the CDC’s 16-15-48 analysis even more difficult.” Travis also notes that “[a]ll industries will be impacted, but the most significant impact will be to those businesses that are not considered to be critical infrastructure workplaces.”

To read the article, visit SHRM (subscription required).

Please reach out to our Media team for any news inquiries.

Related People

Travis W. Vance
Regional Managing Partner
704.778.4164
Email

Service Focus

Workplace Safety and Catastrophe Management