

Workplace Safety Co-Chair Discusses the Election's Potential Impact on OSHA

News

10.28.20

In an interview with Business Insurance, Todd Logsdon discussed what the U.S. Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) might look like under a Joe Biden administration or four more years under President Donald Trump. If Joe Biden gets elected, Todd predicts that the number of OSHA inspectors will likely rise and there will be a push for more regulations. And, if President Trump is re-elected employers will likely see few regulations and little guidance during a second term.
