

Labor Relations Co-Chair Talks About NLRB Ruling on Cannabis Workers

News

11.02.20

Todd Lyon, co-chair of Fisher Phillips Labor Relations practice, recently spoke with Law360 about a NLRB ruling that found workers at a cannabis cultivation and processing facility eligible to unionize under a state statute. The NLRB decision prohibits cannabis laborers from organizing under federal law and the article examines the important take-aways on the ruling. Todd explains that states have taken more interest in regulating the cannabis industry – including unions and employers’ conduct in their labor relations – since the legalization of recreational marijuana in some places.

Todd predicts there will be eventually a collision with the state regulations seeking to control this relationship, and the National Labor Relations Act, where that conduct and the relationship is already managed on a federal scale. And that the federal statute would preempt any state statute on this.

To read the article, visit Law360 (subscription required).

Please reach out to our Media team for any news inquiries.

Related People

Todd A. Lyon
Partner and Labor Relations Group Co-Chair
503.205.8095

Email

Service Focus

Labor Relations

Related Offices

Portland, OR