HOW CAL/OSHA'S COVID-19 STANDARDS WILL IMPACT EMPLOYERS

News

Nov 27, 2020

In his article published by the Daily Journal, Colin Calvert explores how the new emergency standards meant to help prevent the spread of COVID-19 in the workplace will impact employers. He outlines the safety procedures the new standards establish for covered businesses, including the creation, implementation and maintenance of an effective written COVID-19 Prevention Plan. Within those plans, employers must implement systems for communicating, identifying COVID-19 hazards, training and instruction, and reporting and recordkeeping, among many other workplace procedures. Colin explains these new standards create a physical and financial burden for employers.
