Over the last decade, the threat of workplace violence and employees going rogue has become an all too familiar story for employers and human resources professionals. As everyday stress and social pressures continue to weigh heavy on employees and employers alike, implementing a plan to prevent and curb workplace violence is crucial when trying to keep your business safe.

In the article, Shayna provides employers with three essential steps to help prevent workplace violence.

1. Due diligence matters
2. Draw a line the sand
3. Have a plan
