Cheryl Pinarchick, Regional Managing Partner of Fisher Phillips' Boston office, recently spoke with NECN, Boston's NBC station, on whether employers can require their employees receive the COVID-19 vaccine. In the segment, Cheryl explains that in most cases, private employers can require employees get the vaccine before returning to work. She adds that there are exceptions to this rule and employers should really understand the legal boundaries around vaccine policies in the workplace. Cheryl encourages employers to look at existing guidance – like those around the flu vaccine – for guidance on how to update and roll out their COVID vaccine policies.
