Terri Stewart served as a key source for the Atlanta Business Chronicle's special report on the post-pandemic workplace issues corporate lawyers are watching in 2021. Terri explains that throughout the COVID-19 pandemic, in-house counsels' goal has been to keep their business thriving while protecting the health and safety of their employees. But as the pandemic has percolated across the U.S. for nearly a year, employers are navigating new and unexpected workplace issues. These include the complex web of leave laws and accommodation requirements, which come into play when an employee requests to work from home to handle medical issues and familial responsibilities.
