

Columbus Lawyer Talks to Law360 about What GCs Should Expect Under the Biden Administration

News
1.19.21

In an interview with Law360, Ray Perez discusses how the Biden administration's policy changes will impact general counsel at companies across the nation. He explains that regulations are likely to morph under President Biden, and he encourages general counsel to give thought to how their companies should react to changes related to the pandemic with a focus on COVID-19 vaccine guidance.

Ray also warns general counsel that they should expect agencies to create new regulations and revise existing regulations in a way that will impact their business operations. Thus, he encourages corporate lawyers to truly understand the priorities of the various agencies and adds that they will "need to devote more resources to studying proposed regulations and proposed actions, as well as ensuring [their company] has good systems in place to make sure [the company] has compliance with existing systems."
