

Bloomberg Law Interviews Workplace Safety Co-Chair About Potential Nationwide COVID-19 Worker Safety Rule

News
2.09.21

In an interview with Bloomberg Law, Travis Vance discusses how Virginia's COVID-19 workplace safety rule could become a model for a national standard. The article contrasts California's rule with Virginia's rule, and Travis predicts that the federal standard will be much more like the Virginia rule. He notes that "California's standard has a lot of difficult things to comply with...[and] a lot of employers would be taken aback at the resources they would have to pour into complying."

To read the article visit Bloomberg Law (subscription required).

Please reach out to our Media team for any news inquiries.

Related People

Travis W. Vance
Regional Managing Partner
704.778.4164
Email

Service Focus

Workplace Safety and Catastrophe Management

