

Holiday Office Parties: Avoiding Legal Pitfalls

Publication

12.14.15

While holiday parties can be a great way to boost morale and/or express appreciation for employees' hard work, employers need to ensure that this holiday fun does not turn into a New Year's liability. The articles on this page have been generated from Fisher Phillips attorneys and other reliable sources to address how to reduce the risk of liability while allowing the holiday festivities to continue in the spirit intended.

Articles

December 10, 2015

'Tis the Season to Avoid Liability at Holiday Parties

This article provides recommendations on what to do when offering alcohol at a company holiday party

December 10, 2015

Office Party Horror Stories: Avoiding Similar Issues This Holiday Season

This article offers up some advice about common office party mistakes and ways to avoid them.

December 8, 2015

'Tis the Season for Raucous Holiday Office Parties: 6 Tips to Avoid Being Sued

This article provides tips on how to avoid litigious action following an office holiday party.

Quotes & Soundbites

December 16, 2015

Etiquette for Office Holiday Parties

This article explains what is and isn't appropriate for holiday parties with co-workers.

December 14, 2015

Holiday Parties Can Put Host Companies at Risk

This article offers up steps for company party-planning.

December 11, 2015

How To Leave The Firm Holiday Party With Your Dignity Intact

This article discusses how although festive firm parties provide a fun way to wind down after a busy year, an overabundance of eggnog can have bigger consequences than a stocking full of coal for employers and fledgling associates alike.

December 8, 2015

Holiday Gift-Giving at Work: What's Hot, What's Not

This article provides tips on holiday gift-giving in the workplace.

December 1, 2015

Holiday Office Parties: Tips to Avoid Being Sued

In the interview, Mason Alexander offers tips for avoiding law suits following an office holiday party.