

What Should Laundry Operators Expect From OSHA Under Biden?

Publication

4.30.21

In an article published in Textile Services, Todd Logsdon discusses what laundry operators can and should expect from the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) under President Biden. He warns these employers to brace for more aggressive workplace safety enforcement and encourages them to “take actions now to ensure that their safety and health programs comply with rules that, although not enforced during the Trump presidency, remain in place and govern American workplaces.”

Click here to read the full article, which was printed in the April 2021 issue of Textile Services.

Related People

Todd B. Logsdon

Partner

502.561.3971

Email

Service Focus

Workplace Safety and Catastrophe Management

Related Offices

