

Employers Should Review Business Travel and Vacation Policies as Pandemic Continues

News
3.03.21

As the COVID-19 crisis continues, employers may want to update their travel policies to comply with evolving federal and state travel restrictions and workplace safety guidelines. In an interview with SHRM, Nicole Kamm suggests that employers continue to minimize nonessential travel by setting up videoconferences. This will help reduce the need for testing and the risk for spreading the virus across your workforce. If employees do travel – for business or leisure – Nicole says that employers may ask workers to submit daily health and travel questionnaires if they are coming into the workplace or otherwise having person-to-person contact during the workday.

To read the article visit SHRM.

Please reach out to our Media team for any news inquiries.

Related People

Nicole Kamm
Partner
818.230.4253
Email

Trending

COVID-19/Vaccine Resource Center

Related Offices

Woodland Hills