On the final day of the Supreme Court's 2017-2018 term, the court issued its long-awaited decision in Janus v. AFSCME, Council 31, changing the labor law landscape as we know it. In a bylined article for Thomson Reuters' Westlaw Journal Employment, Todd Lyon and Lisa Vickery paint a picture of a post-Janus world where the decision has destabilized the foundation of public-sector labor unions leading to a decreasing influence both in the workplace and the political arena.
