

Memphis Attorney Explains Why Resisting the Temptation to View Former Employees' Data is Critical

Publication

10.12.18

When an employee leaves the company, one of the final steps is to return all company-issued technology, like cell phones and laptop computers. While it may seem well within a leader's job description to do a little snooping on the former employee, it's really a violation of the Stored Communications Act. In his latest article for the Memphis Business Journal, attorney Rob Ratton explains how defecting employees cause business and legal challenges – and how companies can avoid them.

To read the full article, visit the Memphis Business Journal.

Related Offices

Memphis