In an interview with the Legaltech Matters podcast, Evan Shenkman weighs in on the future of legal innovation and technology, highlighting the firm's innovative work around COVID-19.

"Technology has just skyrocketed over the past few years in terms of what it can do; how much of a dramatic change it is now from the KM technology of five years ago, six years ago," Evan said, before pointing to the firm's work on its COVID-19 employment litigation tracker.

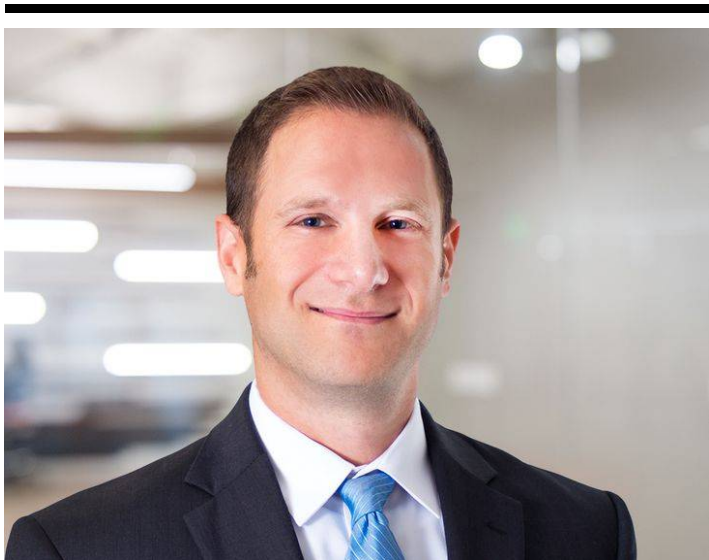

Additionally, Evan discusses other advances in technology, for example, the future implication of natural language processing.

"I think it's going to be huge with legal research—legal research where you could find things based upon concepts and you could find things based on the context rather than just keywords."
