

Denver Managing Partner Explains that Labor Concerns Need Not Deter Transit Agencies' Use of Partial Automation

Publication

3.06.19

Fear of labor disputes is a key factor in transit agencies' hesitation to implement partial automation, according to the Federal Transit Administration. With careful planning, however, labor concerns can be easily addressed, allowing transit agencies to take advantage of partial automation technologies to save money, augment safety and enhance efficiencies, Denver Managing Partner Mike Greco writes in Metro magazine.

Mike's article explains the partial automation technologies transit agencies can utilize and provides guidance agencies can follow to manage the employee concerns that arise from them.

To read the article, visit Metro.

Related People

Michael R. Greco
Regional Managing Partner
303.218.3655
Email

Related Offices

Denver

