

Kansas City Partner Pens Article on Trends in Trade Secret Litigation with Tips for Employers on Protecting Their Company's Information

Publication

May 2022

Advancements in technology have – for better or worse – made it easier for employees to misappropriate their employer's trade secrets to use for their own purposes. In a bylined article published in Intellectual Property & Technology Law Journal, Laura Bailey Brown explains that the Defend Trade Secrets Act (DTSA) has given employers a means of remedying these misappropriations in federal court. Laura reviews the current state of trade secret litigation in light of the DTSA and provides employers with seven tips on how to navigate the sometimes turbulent waters.
