

Charlotte and Houston Partners Recommend Best Practices to Avoid Manager Statements Being Used to Support an OSHA Citation

Publication

8.01.19

When an OSHA inspector shows up at a worksite, anything and everything a manager says to the official – from the moment of arrival to the time of departure – may be used against the company to support a citation. In an article for Rock Road Recycle, Fisher Phillips partners Travis Vance (Charlotte) and Pamela Williams (Houston) recommend best practices to minimize the risk of manager statements coming back to haunt the company.
