

How Employers Should Handle Employee Burnout

Publication

10.06.19

Employee burnout is now an officially diagnosable condition. According to the World Health Organization (WHO), which recently updated its definition, employee burnout is not a medical condition; instead, the WHO calls burnout an “occupational phenomenon.” In a contributed article for Construction Executive, Chantell Foley and Todd Logsdon discuss what employee burnout means for contractors, including whether they are liable for workplace burnout, or if there are any additional safety implications. In their conclusion, the authors state, “Creating awareness campaigns and training initiatives to recognize symptoms of employee burnout and the safety hazards caused by fatigue or lack of concentration may save employees from injuries and illnesses down the road.”

To read the full article, visit Construction Executive.

Related People

Chantell C. Foley

Partner

502.561.3969

Email

Todd B. Logsdon
Partner
502.561.3971
Email

Service Focus

Workplace Safety and Catastrophe Management